

Curriculum Vitae

Saadet Akbay Yenigül is currently a Post-Doctorate Scholar in the Colour Laboratory of Faculty of Architecture, Technical University of Lisbon. She is an Instructor Dr. in the Department of Interior Architecture, Faculty of Architecture, Çankaya University Ankara, Turkey where she has been a faculty member since 2004. She has a Ph.D. from the Department of Industrial Design, Middle East Technical University (METU) for a thesis on 'Multi-attitudinal approaches of colour perception: Construing eleven basic colours by repertory grid technique', completed in 2013. The intention of her thesis is to shed some light on the peculiarity of colour perception. In addition to her academic researches and publications in several conferences, she has participated international colour workshops held by NCS Colour Academy of NCS Colour AB in Stockholm, Sweden. She is also a NCS colour advisor and she has participated in the design and architectural projects, as a colour designer. Her research area of interests include; colour theory, colour perception, colour psychology, colour education, colour harmony, colour design and planning, design education, Natural Colour System (NCS), interior architecture, industrial design, personal construct psychology, repertory grid technique, semantic differential.