Aikaterina Myserli studies Architecture & Engineering (March) at Aristotle University of Thessaloniki in Greece and she is currently working on her diploma design project regarding the transformation of an existing cruise ship into a floating refugee camp for the Syrian refugees that arrive in Greece. Her theoretical thesis "Inhabiting the Desert Island" was based on the text of Gilles Deleuze "Desert Islands" and explored imaginary island societies and new spatial models with emphasis on collectivity. As a researcher of the ongoing refugee crisis (UN volunteering service), she emphasizes on the spatial issues that have occurred in the islands of Eastern Aegean and in the Evros Delta and her work will be presented in June 2016 at Aristotle University of Thessaloniki. Along with her studies she has collaborated with technical companies in Thessaloniki (AcquaTech, IPS), she has been awarded in international student architectural competitions and her work has been published in Biennale Brau 2 and Imagine the city_2014 exhibition.
